Series

A great curriculum is like a great museum

Getting our curriculum right is one of the most important jobs for an history teacher. We have a responsibility to do justice to the past. But how do we do this? What makes a great curriculum?

In this webinar series Richard Kennett (HA Trustee, Chartered Teacher of History and textbook author) explores all the facets of curriculum. Richard will argue that a good curriculum is like a good museum where you the curator must consider what is put on show, what is stored away, how things are presented and how we know what the visitors experienced. In each webinar Richard will look at one theme and will be joined by a guest presenter to provide a different perspective.

New Series

Untold Stories of the Second World War

There are countless events, people, acts of defiance, courage, bravery and sheer hard work during the Second World War that have remained untold stories...until now. During the past year the Royal British Legion has been working with the specialist historian and film-maker Martyn Cox (Legasee Educational Trust ambassador and co-founder of the Secret WWII Learning Network) to produce brand new films and classroom resources. These highlights also shed fascinating new light on the service and sacrifice of Second World War veterans from Britain, the Commonwealth and Allied nations.

The Historical Association is pleased to work in partnership with the Royal British Legion and Legasee to bring you a brand-new series of free webinars delving into the making of these films, the interviews with those who were there and how you can bring these previously untold stories into the history classroom. The series starts in January.
